THE DEATH SENTENCE.

Guiteau to be Hanged on the 30th of June.

Upon Being Sentenced the Assassin Makes a Wild Demonstration.

But Cools Off When Taken to Jail and Takes a Hopeful View.

A Small Pox Incident of the Assassin's Mail. ---

'Be still," said his counsel, sternly, "I will not be still," was the angry theory. You seem to have no sense and I don't want my case prejudiced again, and you had better keep still. The prisoner said all this bawling at the top of his voice and pounding the table with his clenched fist. "You had better keep still," remonstrated a bailiff. "You shut up," cried Guiteau, turning around savagely. "I will not be still for you or any body else, sir."

In answer to a question by the prisoner the court said: "The sentence is passed and the execution deferred man engaged in my prosecution.

Guiteau did not seem to like this arrangement. He wanted the passing of sentence deferred. He jumped up wildly when Mr. Scoville essayed to address the court and shouted: "You keep your mouth shut. I do not intend to let you do anything else in this case. You convicted me by your assinine conduct and foolishness here." His face became purple with rage and he flung his arms wildly around, banging his fist down vigorously upon the table. He contin-ed: "You came into the case and have done all this mischief. Your intention may have been good, but I want brain and experience, not intention. Let me alone and I will pull through. You, sir," shouting at the top of his voice, "got me into this trouble." [Laughter.] Mr. Scoville bore this tirade patiently. The bailiffs put the prisoner forcibly into his seat. He tried to strike Tully but was overpowered. The audience rose to see what was going on. The few ladies present to go.
